Dear Josh:

I have been rereading some of Willard Espy's humorous writings and came on his republication, in Words at Play, of the wonderful review of Lady Chatterley's Lover by Field and Stream. I thought you might enjoy reading it; it is enclosed.

I think the point about warning, in some fashion, adjunct faculty about an inappropriate reference to their association with the Rockefeller University is an important one, but I am not sure how the admonition can be conveyed most effectively. I suppose that it ought to be done through the laboratory heads with whom the adjunct faculty are associated - but let me give it some thought. We have had a number of instances where adjunct clinical staff inadvertently, I suppose - or perhaps with a prideful desire to see themselves connected with the Rockefeller - use this association in a way that was not appropriate from our point of view. How the association may be properly referred to thus ought to be defined; perhaps it is a useful topic for the Council to consider.

Yours sincerely,

Attallah Kappas, M.D.
